Committee Gives $2,435, and Hopes More Contributions
Will Be Forthcoming.

Undiscouraged by the slow response of citizens of the District to the appeal for funds for the Fourth of July celebration, the citizens' committee has determined to appropriate $2,435 toward the expenses. Of this, $1,000 will be spent for fireworks, and $1,000 for the pastime to be held on the Monument grounds.

The cast for this pageant will be completed at a meeting tomorrow evening at Independence Day headquarters, 128 F street. The first meeting of the chorus will be held Wednesday evening at the McKinley High School building, seventh street and Rhode Island avenue.

Pageant Parts Allotted.
The appropriation is considerably larger than the fund in the treasury of the celebration committee, only $800 having been given to date. But the committee and the commissioners are hopeful more money will come in. Two of the important parts in the pageant have been allotted. George T. Odell will appear as Uncle Sam and Miss Emma L. Ostrander as to be Columbia. Others in the cast will be Mrs. J. A. Rich, William Leavitt Stoddard, Miss Blanche Sperry and Charles E. Herring. Among the dancers will be the Misses Ruby Raymond, Dorothy and Mona Jellman, Dorothy Shaw, Lillian Nichol, Mary Decker and Mrs. George T. Odell.

Mrs. Robert Hilliard Dies at Siasconsett

NANTUCKET, Mass., June 15.—Mrs. Robert Hilliard, wife of the well-known actor, died last night in the Hilliard cottage at Siasconsett. Mr. Hilliard, who has recently been starring in "The Argyle Case" in New York, arrived on the noon boat from New Bedford. Mrs. Hilliard was taken ill while she stood on the dock waving to him upon the arrival of the boat.

FINDS PRETTY GIRL IN HOUSE AT NIGHT

She Tells Thrilling Tale of Being Sent to Rob Home by Paris Apaches.

PARIS, June 15.—M. Favelle, a wealthy merchant of this city, has received practically gratis an insight into feminine duplicity which he is likely never to forget.

The education began by his seeing, at a very late hour at night, a light in his wife's bedroom. As Mme. Favelle was out of town, M. Favelle got his automatic pistol and attempted to enter the room.

Immediately he crossed the threshold, out went the electric light. Convinced that the person in the room was there for no good purpose, M. Favelle fired into the air. Simultaneously with the second sharp crack of the pistol, came a female's scream, followed by the sound of a body falling.

Cautiously advancing, the householder made toward the electric light button and switched on the light. The first rays displayed a charming young woman clad in Mme. Favelle's latest evening gown, lying unconscious upon the carpet.

M. Favelle applied restoratives with such good effect that fifteen minutes later the woman was sitting upon a settee and unfolding a hair-raising tale.

Tool of Apaches.

Briefly she was the tool of a gang of the worst Apaches in all the four quarters of the City of Light. The gang, she said, had made her enter the house, and had through fear of death compelled her to throw valuables to them to the ground below.

At length, said the fair raconteuse, madame's bedchamber was reached, and the first thing that the opening of the wardrobe disclosed was the beautiful creation which the speaker was now wearing.

"It was irresistible," she said to M. Favelle. "The apaches outside threatened to come and shoot me if I did not hurry, but M. Favelle, I was lashed with that evening gown, and whether I was killed or not, I had to put it on. Then, I added some of madame's jewels—they are exquisite, M. Favelle—and then, ah, me! I heard footsteps. The dread apaches were coming to kill me, I thought, but M. Favelle, it was you. Then—well, doesn't M. Favelle know the rest?"

CAN THROW WHOLE BODY OUT OF JOINT

Young Man's Ligaments Are So Loose He Can Put His Heart Down to His Waist Line.

ATLANTA, Ga., June 15.—One of the most curious of the many freaks of nature is shown in the person of Ellis Whitman, an ordinary looking young man who has reached Atlanta on a tour around the world. So loose are the ligaments which bind his anatomy together, that he can dislocate practically every organ in his body.

The man can throw his heart down into the lower portion of his body, apparently below his diaphragm, until his beating is felt at his waist line. His hip and shoulders fall out of joint and flip back into position with the utmost ease.

Performs Remarkable "Stunts."
Whitman says he has been giving demonstrations before various medical societies, and will endeavor to demonstrate his ability before the Fulton County Medical Society.

By his remarkable control of the muscles and ligaments, Whitman can perform several "stunts" that would outclass the professional vaudeville entertainer. By simply placing a pen on his hip and throwing the joint out of place, he can flip the pen across the room as an arrow is shot from a bow.

Standing eighteen inches away from an object he can throw his right shoulder out of the socket until the arm is so elongated that his fingers reach out and touch the object.

Warned By Physicians.

"Every doctor who has seen me perform these dislocations has warned me against it," says Whitman, "but it is my way of earning a living, and I intend to keep it up as I have done from the time I was five years old, and my mother noticed the looseness of my ligaments."

"The dislocations I give," he continued, "are those of the shoulder, subclavicular, subcoracoid, subglenoid, subacromion, hip, sciotic, lateral, curvature and lordosis."

Whitman, who gives his age as twenty-four years, says he has been around the world in the course of his travels, and that he was used by Dr. Feinberg, a professor in Heidelberg University, in demonstrations to show his students the new methods of setting dislocated bones.
